Collin I Hood

Collin I Hood — Voice of the Realms

Collin I Hood is a cherished figure in Western Colorado's performing arts community, known for their vibrant work as an actor, improviser, and playwright. Their journey has carried them across many of Grand Junction's stages—from their formative years in Colorado Mesa University's Theatre Arts Department to their dynamic performances with the improv troupe Oddly Appropriate.

Beyond the spotlight, Collin devotes their time to nurturing the next generation of performers, teaching and directing youth improv programs with enthusiasm and heart. When not guiding young artists or preparing for their next production, they can be found crafting new plays, adventuring through TTRPG worlds, devouring books, and delighting in all things wonderfully nerdy.

Collin's signature style is rooted in interactive, grounded performance—an approach that draws audiences in, elevates the moment, and radiates a contagious joy long after the scene ends. Their presence brings energy, connection, and a spark of magic to every gathering.

As the Voice of the Realms, Collin lends their talent, warmth, and boundless creativity to guiding guests through the enchantment of the Mesa County Fantasy Faire. Their storytelling spirit and infectious enthusiasm help shape the very heartbeat of the Realm.
